Hey Leslie, thanks so much for the email. Yes, I likely won't be back on tour until the top of the year at which point I'll be sure to reach out and maybe I can stop by a class.

Until then I would just say to your students: Do as many things as you can until you find something that makes you happy, then figure out a way to do that thing all the time. Money and everything else will come accordingly.

Hi Dallas,

My name is Leslie Meyer and I am a graduate student living in northern Ohio. I learned about you this week from a Google commercial and looked up your website, read the online version of "An Awesome Book" yesterday and had to go right out and purchase a hard copy for myself. :) I am fascinated by your artwork and absolutely am a HUGE fan of what you write about- dreaming, giving thanks, and love. I am actually teaching a Job Search class this semester to college students at a regional campus of Bowling Green State University located in Huron, OH on the shores of Lake Erie. I SO wish you could come and talk to our class about fulfilling your dreams, but I know that this is not feasible so I wanted to reach out to you by e-mail to let you know that I plan to read the book to my class as a discussion opener to talk about the importance of dreaming and dreaming big when it comes to your career and every other area of your life. I thought it might be cool if you would be willing to share some of your thoughts on the importance of dreaming with my class of college students by sending me a few thoughts via e-mail. If so I would be most grateful and if not, I completely understand. I am certain you have a full plate. I think by the time many folks graduate from high school and attend college they lose the ability to dream like they did when they were younger. I love to read about people pursuing their passion and your story is nothing short of incredible. If nothing else, I am thankful that I got the opportunity to e-mail you and tell you that I love your first book and plan to buy "An Awesome Book of Love" and "An Awesome Book of Thanks", too. My local bookstore only had your first book. :) Thanks for the work you are doing and the message you are spreading all over the country. Today, you have another huge fan- ME! :) All the best to you!
